INTRODUCTION

Biographical Note

Peter Charles Sims was born in Launceston 24th February 1938, and grew up in the Lilydale area and on the North-West Coast. He developed an early interest in nature and the environment. After attending Hawkesbury Agricultural College (NSW) for two terms, he worked firstly for Edgells and subsequently spent 25 years with Tootal (Devonport). Initially a laboratory assistant, Peter was later Chief Chemist, and when Tootal became part of Bradmill Industries he was designated Technical Manager. He retired on health grounds in 1980.

About 1960 he started mountain climbing, Cradle Mountain first (1961), and later other Tasmanian mountains and wilderness areas. He became a member of the North West Walking Club, taking up photography at that time, and in 1968 began exploring the Tarkine/Norfolk Ranges. In 1965 Tasventure ® was formed, and Peter also became a member of the group which started the Save Lake Pedder Campaign (about which there was some conflict with the Hobart Walking Club). He has been involved with conservation matters ever since, participating in the first march for the environment held in Tasmania (in Devonport). In the period 1970-1974, Tasventure ® took groups into Lake Pedder and other areas by bus and a licenced 4-wheel drive. Peter considers these trips to have been the first venture in 4WD eco-tourism in the state.

Throughout the 1960's-1970's, while still working full-time for Tootal, Peter led a crowded life with his conservation and bushwalking interests. When on Company business, he was able to make overseas contacts in England, Norway, New Zealand, Germany, Switzerland, and the United States.

Although not of Aboriginal descent himself, Peter also developed an interest in Tasmanian Aboriginal archaeology. He claims to have discovered the first inland rock shelter (in the Mersey Valley), making a photographic record and preparing a report on it. Encouraged by Fred McCarthy (then Principal of the Australian Institute of Aboriginal Studies, Canberra), he undertook further research into some 13 sites relating to petroglyphs in Tasmania, and began collecting source material about Aboriginal rock art in particular. In 1974, he addressed the AIAS Conference in Canberra on Tasmania's needs for related legislation, and was the only non-scientist on the Committee which resulted in the State Aboriginal Relics Act 1975. The same year, Peter nominated the first reserve under that legislation (Swandown (sic) Point on the West Coast). Following the Tarkine campaign, Club Tarkine an eco-tourism organisation was formed and Peter took an active part in cross-cultural tours for Japanese/Ainu students with Mersey Level Aboriginal Corporation (later Six Rivers Aboriginal Corporation) and JAHADI (Hank & Carol Horton).

In the 1980's, after he retired from Tootal, Peter began exploring his family history, especially its Norfolk Island roots. In 1986 he organised a successful reunion of Abel descendants at New Norfolk. The Abel Family genealogy had been published the previous year, and his Norfolk Settlers of Norfolk Island and Van Diemen's Land (1987) won a Bicentennial award in 1988.

Peter has also been associated with the National Fitness Council of Tasmania (assisting in the leadership training of young people), with Mountain Search and Rescue, was involved with the USA Sierra Club South West Aerial Safaris (started by Jack Thwaites OAM) for three years and led a trekking group of 18 to Sikkim and northern India for Ausventure ® that had been established by Major Warwick Deacock FRGS [1926-2017] who established Outward Bound in Australia. He still maintains an interest in environmental matters and publishing, and has a wide circle of contacts on environmental bodies (like the Australian Conservation Foundation). He received an Order of Australia Medal (OAM) in 1990 for 'services to conservation and the environment'.

Following his interest in family history he visited California and the Yukon Territory in Canada to gather material for a publication on the goldrush connections with Tasmania. This was included in a series of three publications, the first being in 2006 about his Maclaine connections The Butler Sisters - the life and times of Maclaine, Lapham & Radcliff families of Scotland, Ireland, Australia and New Zealand Vol.I. Following a trip to New Zealand to meet up with family members he also undertook research at several institutions that enabled the second volume of The Butler Sisters (Vol.II. Lapham) that was self-published in 2010. The final volume of The Butler Sisters about the Radcliff family was published in 2011. To complete publication of his family connections, after locating descendants of his previously 'lost' Great Uncle in Adelaide, the story of the Australian Sims family, including Launceston, was self-published in 2013.

In 2001, following a visit by members of the Native Forest Network, USA, as their guest Peter visited California, Oregon, Washington State and Montana, presenting illustrated public lectures on Tasmania's Tarkine and its Gondwana links.

The Launceston Environment Centre Inc. formed in 1964 benefited from Peter's membership from 1995-2003 serving on its Board of Management and as Chairman from 1998-2003.

Following on from his interest in Tasmanian Aboriginal history and rock art, Peter has had published articles in the Australian Rock Art Research journal and is a life member of the Australian Rock Art Research Association (AURA). His certification as an Indigenous Community Volunteer (ICV) enabled a close link with the Mersey Leven Aboriginal Corporation (later known as Six Rivers Aboriginal Corporation) and with Tiagarra the Tasmanian Aboriginal Culture and Education Centre, Devonport which he was instrumental in setting up in 1976. In 2010/11 his funding applications provided opportunities for varied cultural projects and experiences for this local Aboriginal group.

Additional writing updated the 1994 manuscript that chronicled the save Lake Pedder campaign of 1967. This was self-published in 2012 with assistance from the Tasmanian Conservation Trust, Dick Smith and the Australian Geographic Society. More recently, the first in a monograph series was self-published on Tasmanian Rock Art - Monster Creek Site based on field notes and site records from his collection and in 2013 a paper titled “No reprieve for Tasmanian Rock Art” was accepted by a Swiss Arts journal, and is available on-line as an ‘e’-publication. Also in 2013, some early music was found after being lost since it was published in 1838. It was composed by colonial artist Henry Mundy who taught music in Van Diemen’s Land. The story of the Mundy family together with the re-publishing of the complete Eight Sets of Quadrilles resulted in the launch of a book at QVMAG Colonial Gallery set amidst Mundy’s portraits in March 2014.

Based on past field studies, progressively monographs are self-published on Tasmanian Aboriginal rock art. The CHS37 collection is constantly revised and updated and personal funds have been set aside to enable the management of this collection.

The Collection (CHS 37)

Peter Sims has made donations to the Queen Victoria Museum and Art Gallery (QVMAG) ever since his school days. However, this guide is primarily concerned with his archival material, including diaries, correspondence, working papers, maps, photographs, tape recordings and film/videos, received since late 1997 and held in the QVMAG’s Community History Collection (CHS 37).

The arrangement of the Sims Collection User’s Guide essentially reflects Peter's main collecting interests - Tasmanian Aboriginals (Section B) [Note that some items have restricted access], conservation (Section C), and his own family history (Section E). Other sections cover his diaries (Section A), videos/films (Section F), records relating to Tootal Australia Limited (Section G), maps and oversize material (H) and oral history (J) audio cassette tape recordings.

Some of the earlier records of the Launceston Environment Centre are located within CHS37 in the “L” series 1-38, plus some oversize items.

However, the guide does include general references to donations held in other QVMAG collections, although these are controlled separately (see Other Sources at the end of the guide). For example, Peter’s books and journals relating to Aborigines have been donated to the QVMAG Library and his extensive library of over 2,500 titles has been Willed to the Library. Several recordings are held in the QVMAG Oral History Collection.

The guide has been prepared gradually over several years, through discussion with the donor and to avoid disruption to his on-going work on the collection itself. Links between related components of the collection, and to material deposited in other institutions, are noted in the guide as far as possible.

THE LAUNCESTON ENVIRONMENT CENTRE Inc. COLLECTION

During 1974 there was increasing community support for the establishment of an environment centre in the north of the state. Representatives from three organisations - the Northern Branch of the Tasmanian Conservation Trust, Launceston Walking Club and the Launceston Field Naturalists Club, met on a regular basis to prepare guidelines for the proposed centre and these groups continued to assist with the establishment of the Launceston Environment Centre after it was opened in October 1974.

The State Minister for the Environment, Doug Lowe MHA, officially opened the LEC the following year in September in rooms, above Gourlays sweet shop in Brisbane Street. Over the years there were successive moves until in 1981 when it opened its doors at the Wesley Chambers at 34 Patterson Street.

Both State and Federal Governments supported the LEC with grants which decreased over the years with the State discontinuing its financial support. As a means to raising funds the Jimmy Possum Bookshop was opened in October 1977 and this subsequently provided necessary funds for the centre to operate with paid staff for many years.

Local community concerns were always central to the issues adopted by the LEC and in addition its role is to increase public awareness on environmental matters. Dedicated volunteers have always been the mainstay of the LEC and as issues became central other groups used the facilities. These groups included the Wilderness Society during the Franklin campaign, People for Nuclear Disarmament, Project Jonah, Greenpeace, Pedal Power, Organic Gardening & Farming Society and others. A food co-operative was established for several years until demands for space and staff time saw it move and become independent.

After almost 25 years the LEC Board decided to move into more prominent and spacious premises. LEC member Janet Dale owned an ideal location at 226 Charles Street, opposite the Teaching Centre and these bright, new premises were officially opened on 25 July, 1998 by the Mayor of Launceston, Alderman John Lees with several State and Federal politicians also attending.

It was during this move that it was decided to reduce the amount of material held in the LEC library as much was out of date and had limited use. It was therefore decided that it should be donated to the Queen Victoria Museum and Art Gallery where it could be archived and made accessible to the public in years to come. The collection of early books, publications, newspaper scrapbooks, posters, stickers, badges and paper records that had formed part of the earlier resource of the LEC were donated outright to the Museum. The books were deposited at the QVM Library and the other components of the collection were deposited at the QVM Community History Section. Carol Williams who was a founding member of the LEC listed the material and in February 2001 Museum staff and volunteers sorted and archived the collection.

A detailed 'User's Guide' was prepared to facilitate public access of the collection.
