INTRODUCTION

Leslie Henry Hill was born on 14 December 1916 at Devonport, the son of Richard Henry and Ella Louise Hill. After completing his education at the local state and high school he attended night classes at the Launceston Technical College about 1937.

He qualified as a pharmaceutical chemist, going on to work at the R F Johnstone Pharmacy, firstly in Rooke Street, Devonport and then in the branch shop in what is now the Mall. There he sold and repaired cameras and was recognised as having a commanding knowledge of cameras and photography.

Les exhibited his prints in photographic competitions all over the world from the 1940s to the 1950s. He produced the prints for Harry Firth's book on Tasmanian orchids (processing them from glass plate negatives), and also mentored many local professional photographers.

Hill loved the mountains and nature, ultimately being able to link his photography expertise to his interest in the natural environment. This was especially so with birds: he was the first to photograph the Tasmanian Masked Owl at nest. Les was very proud of being invited to address the Royal Australasian Ornithologists Union in Sydney.

He gave numerous public slide shows and edited his film footage into features for public showings. Walt Disney reputedly offered to pay him £100 a foot of movie film that Disney used in his nature films. Les Hill did some occasional work for the ABC and possibly TNT 9, taking news footage of various events. He also took film of logging near Smithton in the late 1960s as he was concerned about the effect on the countryside.

Hill was a practical man with wide-ranging interests. He invented a photo-finish camera to use at the Devonport Carnival, and also a machine to judge running races. In later years he was made a Life Member of the Devonport Athletic Club. He was also interested in motorbike racing on beaches and loved snow skiing and mountains.

He married Phyllis Knight at Devonport and they had three children: Douglas (born 1945), Julie (b. 1949) and Terry (b. 1951). They bought a house at 9 Upper Fenton Street, now Hiller St, and lived there for 52 years. Les Hill retired in the late 1970s, though he subsequently did some locum work before he died on 9 January 1995.

The collection was donated to the Queen Victoria Museum and Art Gallery in 2006, with assistance of the Friends of the Queen Victoria Museum and Art Gallery.
