INTRODUCTION

Dorothea Isabel Henslowe was born in Launceston in 1896. She lived in the Scottsdale area until she was three, when her family moved to a farm at Ulverstone, and was educated by a governess until leaving home to complete her schooling at the Church of England Girls' Grammar School in Launceston. After leaving school she worked as a teacher and governess, including at Launceston's Frederick Street School. From 1919 to 1920 she was a member of the Voluntary Aid Detachment at Hornsey Hospital in Launceston, then returned to teaching. In 1925 she went to live with her family in Hamilton, where her father had been appointed Anglican Rector, and spent the next ten years there helping in the parish and giving aid to the needy.

After her parents died in 1935, Dorothea travelled to Canada and then settled in Battery Point, Hobart. She worked for the Australian Board of Mission, a missionary organisation of the Anglican Church that works largely in Asia, the Pacific and with Aboriginal communities. She worked in an honorary capacity for this organisation for over 30 years. She was first appointed Secretary to the Women's Auxiliary of the Australian Board of Mission in 1937, serving in the position until 1943. She was then appointed as the Honorary State Secretary for Tasmania and established the organisation's State office. In this role she became the first woman to address the Synod of the Anglican Church in Tasmania. She retired as Honorary State Secretary in 1954, but continued to serve on the organisation's board and as its representative to the Anglican Synod. She was Federal President of the organisation for six years, and Federal President of the Women's Auxiliary from 1964 to 1967. She also served as a voluntary worker on the Diocesan Children's Homes Committee, which oversaw the management of Children's Homes operated by the Tasmanian Diocese of the Anglican Church, including five years as its Honorary Secretary and later three as its President. She was an initiator of the Canterbury Tea Rooms which raised funds for both the Australian Board of Mission and the Diocesan Children's Homes between 1949 and 1959.

Dorothea Henslowe was active in the Battery Point community. She was Vice President of the Battery Point Progress Association, and was President for 11 years of a committee which purchased a former Methodist Church in the 1960s to prevent its demolition and replacement by a service station. The Church became the Battery Point Community Centre. She ran a playgroup for underprivileged children and a boys' club and suggested the establishment of a Senior Citizens' Club there. In 1987 the Centre's grounds were renamed Henslowe Park in recognition of her role in its establishment.

She had a wide interest in the history of Tasmania, particularly its buildings. In 1971, Dorothea and a friend had the idea of taking tourists for guided tours of Battery Point. These were established the same year. She took many of the walks herself and also trained other guides to lead them. The walks raised funds for the restoration of St George's Anglican Church at Battery Point and for the National Trust. In 1978 she published a book, Our Heritage of Anglican Churches in Tasmania, a history of Anglican church buildings in the state.

Dorothea Henslowe received a number of awards in recognition of her community and tourism work, including a British Empire Medal in 1979. She became a life member of the National Trust in 1986 and was Hobart City Council's Citizen of the Year in 1990. That same year she won the Tasmanian Visitor Corporation Award, an award created especially for her.

She travelled extensively within Australia and overseas, including a trip to Central Australia to observe the work of the Australian Board of Mission. She published two books as a result of trips to Papua New Guinea, Papuan Post in 1947 and Papua Calls in 1954. During several trips to the United Kingdom, Canada and the United States she visited family members. In 1966 her sister Muriel Cranswick travelled with her to the Holy Lands and again in 1972 when she made a return visit to Papua New Guinea.

Dorothea Henslowe died in 1994. Her ashes are at St Peter's Anglican Church at Hamilton.

The collection was donated to the Queen Victoria Museum and Art Gallery in April 1999.
