INTRODUCTION

The Launceston Art Society is one of the oldest art societies still operating in Australia and has played an important role in the north of Tasmania since its establishment in 1891.

The Society had its origins in the Launceston Drawing Club, 'a select art society of ladies' resident in Launceston and adjacent areas. Although it is not known when the Drawing Club was established, its first exhibition opened on 19 November 1891 in a room over Messrs Ritchie and Parkers' offices in St John Street. The exhibition included drawings, oil paintings, watercolours, photographs and bric-a-brac. There were 30 members of the Club and the committee consisted of 10 young ladies.

During the second year of exhibition some male photographers also exhibited. By 1898 the group was known as the Launceston Art Club and in 1899 it was named and constituted the Launceston Art Society.

The first president, Mary Augusta Greig, had been taught drawing by Samuel Prout Hill whilst still at school and later studied with Albert Henry Fullwood. Her home, 'Stratton Cottage', a Georgian cottage in York Street, was one of the early meeting places of the Society. Her daughters Ethel and Florence were early exhibitors with the Society and Ethel and her sister-in-law Ella Lillian Greig gave private lessons in their studio above the stables at 'Stratton Cottage' and exhibited with the Society for many years. Louisa Swan, the first honorary secretary, was also one of Fullwood's pupils.

An artist who exhibited with the Society from 1908 until her death in 1946 was Laura Dean, the daughter of artist Robert Beauchamp. Her daughter, Laura Stewart, was honorary secretary of the Society for many years and in recognition received life membership in 1959. Another member with a long record of service was photographer Fred Smithies who was honorary treasurer for 60 years, although according to an article in the Examiner of 24 March 1972 he had never tried to paint.

From 1892 to 1896 two exhibitions were held annually, however in the latter year it was determined that one annual exhibition would be sufficient and help to maintain a high quality of entries. This policy remained in place until 1968 when the decision was made to hold spring exhibitions as well as the one in autumn. In 1977 a room was made available to the Society at Ritchies' Mill for meetings and classes.

Over the years exhibitions have been held in a number of venues: from 1891 to 1982 they are listed in The Launceston Art Society in retrospect: 1891-1983, published by the Queen Victoria Museum and Art Gallery in 1983.

When art education was still in its infancy the Society played an important role in broadening the range of art available to the local community by encouraging artists from mainland states and Hobart to exhibit in its annual exhibitions. In the early years a close association appears to have been maintained with the Art Society of Tasmania, evidenced by the number of Hobart members who regularly exhibited with the Launceston Art Society and local members who contributed to Hobart exhibitions. In 1901 when the Duke and Duchess of York visited Hobart they were presented with an album of sketches compiled by the two societies.

In 1927 Dame Nellie Melba opened a loan exhibition of early Tasmanian art organised by the Society. Between 1927 and 1929 the Society raised sufficient funds to have John Glover's grave at Deddington restored.

In 1932 the Queen Victoria Museum and Art Gallery purchased a selection of Tasmanian works with funds from the Mary Nicholls Bequest from a special Society exhibition. In 1951, in addition to the annual autumn exhibition, a historical loan exhibition was arranged as part of the Society's diamond jubilee celebrations.

Many of Australia's most celebrated artists, and in particular notable Tasmanian artists, have exhibited with the Society since its foundation. Prominent Tasmanian art teachers have supported the Society by exhibiting, acting as judges and committee members.

In 1991 when the Society celebrated its centenary with an exhibition held at Chalmers Church, 12 awards were presented, including the prestigious City of Launceston acquisitive award.¹

In 2007 the Launceston Art Society continues to flourish. It encourages local and developing artists, promotes painting activities and holds exhibitions with a mix of amateur and professional members entering the various categories for prizes offered. Students are encouraged to exhibit as well. Members meet regularly and workshops are conducted twice a year with well known mainland and Tasmanian artists.

Most of the above information comes from Barbara Chapman's The Launceston Art Society in retrospect: 1891-1983 (Queen Victoria Museum and Art Gallery, 1983) and the Society's web site.

The collection was donated to the Queen Victoria Museum and Art Gallery in 1980, 1983 and 1993, with additional items donated in 2007 and 2008.
